still reign; while labor unionism is rigorously excluded from the rigant industries controlled by them; how rigorously, Laddow and the Minnesota ore regions tell the tale. At the same time, attempts at assessimation are made on these leaders; and workingmen for-sake trades-unionism for industrial union action, where their elegitimate aspirations 'take on an ever more revolutionary character. Newspapers of the middle classes ridicule the pretensions of these foremost capitalists, and large numbers of those classes array themselves against their combinations, in a harmless, but menacing mood, that is growing in intensity and taking on less of a political and more of an economic character; especially in the analysis of the second of the second of the second of the second of a political and more of an economic character; especially in the building conservative working class bulwarks about them. But capitalism is fearful of organization, since that is the basis of its power. It destroyed conservative trade-unionism for benevolent feudalism, by means of which it has attempted another conservation movement. But the substitute, as already indicated, has failed. Labor rises out of trades-unionism, into industrial unionism; and for conservatives aspirations it has to a great extent, substituted revolutionary ends. This has been, in a large measure, in evidence in the 1_W W, strikes on the Iron and Messaha ore vanges. Labor is satacking the trusts in a new re-alignment and spirit. It is likely to fail, in fact, to fail repeatedly. But each assault on the trust will develop the new unionism and make more aggressive its spirit; while, at the same time causing the various social elements to embrace the cause of either one side or the other unities against and woman should do all the tends.

Women In Industry

It has been said that women are the conservators of the race. Comparatively few women are revolutionists by nature. They are inclined to conservatism. It is true, however, that a woman possessed wholly of revolutionary ideals, will go further hight harder, endure more, and stick longer than her brother is the ranks.

We live in towns owned by the boss, And call their shacks our home; Because we have no spot on earth That we can call our own.

A few old scraps of household The cheapest kind of dress: goods;
The cheapest kind of dress;
Perhaps a cow, perhaps a dog;
Is all that we possess.

We rise up early in the morn And work all day real hard. To buy our scanty cloth and food, And try to serve the Lord.

From sun fill late, at a hustle rate With cotton, cloth and thread, We toil and sweat, and go in debt, To buy our meat and bread.

When we go walking down the
All street,
All wrapped in lint and strings,
They call us "fools" and "factory trash,"
And other low-down things.

Our little babes grow up unlearned, Not time to go to school; Almost before they learn to walk, They learn to spin or spool.

The boss men jerk them round about, And whistle very keen; I tell you, friends, the factory kids Are treated very mean.
